ON THE EVE OF WAR.

NEVER was there a better time for a declaration of war. The country is filled with idle men and tens of thousands are clamoring for bread. The spirit of unrest is in the land and the call to arms will serve as a safety valve on the energies of the nation which might work mischief at home. There can be no comparison between the fighting strength of the two nations. The United States is entrenched with gilt-edged credit and a preparedness for war that never was known in previous history. The administration has held back so long that the people will not prone to accept the present excuse as a fitting or dignified termination of an international squabble that has been humiliating and costly to the people of the United States.

This twentieth day of April, 1914, will fill another memorable date in chronological annals alongside of the twenty-first of April, 1908, when war was declared against Spain for mistreatment of Cuba and the destruction of the Maine. It is a striking analogy that both dates should come so close together and it is hoped that the Mexican imbroglio will not be more lasting than the Spanish-American war, which virtually terminated on the third of July with the destruction of Cervera's fleet.

The challenge of Huerta to the United States cannot be treated as an act of madcap or the bravado of a bombastic nature. Rather it should be regarded as a cool calculation of the difference between capture and certain execution by his friend Villa and retirement into safe exile under the protection of the United States. By inviting intervention Huerta becomes a constructive hero at the end of his intriguing days and he will be furnished with an escort out of the country which has become unhealthy for one of his tyrannical propensities. It does not follow that Villa and Carranza will prove acceptable rulers to succeed Huerta and it is probable that the temporary occupation and pacification of Mexico will be protracted into another decade. The first effect will be to depreciate American securities and advance quotations of all Mexican stocks. Under the protecting arm of Uncle Sam mines and factories will reopen, commerce will be re-established, farms and ranges will be restocked and industrious citizens will be invited to return to the homes from which they were dispossessed by warring factions. This will invite a rush to the southern republic and recrudescence of a paralyzed nation will eventually lead to a business revival in the United States through stimulation of industry and development of natural resources that had been shackled in internecine strife.

MINING AS A BUSINESS.

A LOT of goggle-eyed, narrow-minded cramped intellects of the east who hold down jobs of financial editors have been preaching to their constituents the necessity for avoiding mining investments which are denounced as artifices of the devil promoted for the purpose of separating the people from their money. As a rule such writers are gifted with profound ignorance on all matters pertaining to the greatest single industry on the continent and the Bonanza respectfully suggests the propriety of these gentlemen taking a course in mining before they commit themselves further to their present policy. The only excuse for launching their jeremiads against mining is their leaning toward the established plundering of Wall street. However, attention is directed to the experience of the best mining men in the United States, recently emphasized by the action of Tonopah mining companies. The success of the Tonopah Mining company and the Tonopah Belmont Development company cannot be gainsayed. These companies have paid out in dividends $18,000,000 in the course of ten years' legitimate mining and are naturally supposed to know something of the industry they represent. This experience qualifies them to speak authoritatively and it is pleasant to reflect that both companies, with the consent of their stockholders, have extended their operations by using their surplus millions for the purchase of other mining properties. They are not placing their millions in skyscrapers yielding two per cent a year, in bonds paying three to five per cent, or in the construction of railroads and shipping subject to the mutations of the whirling dervishes of politics. No, they are placing their funds back in mines which they know can be made to yield greater returns than from any other form of investment. They are backed by experience. The leading stockholders of these companies knew little or nothing about mining when they were induced to take on one Nevada mining investment, but they have learned the practical side of the industry through the distribution of dividends and they have acquired a knowledge of the difference between mining for speculation and mining for investment.

Eighteen millions of dollars in profits from an investment of $2,500,000 in the short course of ten years is the argument that appeals to these men. They know there is no other business that will yield such returns and they have gone on record to perpetuate their investment by the purchase of other mining properties. They know what they are doing and cannot be accused of venturing into unexplored fields, and this practical demonstration of what has been done is a happy forerunner of what will certainly reward their efforts in whatever other mining field they choose to cast their lot.

The Ely Expositor is invoking the game law for the editors who propose to defy the alleged purity of elections act. He better attend to his own business, which should be pretty brisk on the opening of the campaign. He is now engaged in upbraiding Newlands for his perfidy, but after the primaries he will have to keep a civil tongue in his head and a silent typewriter at his side.

Manana never comes. Tomorrow is the temporizing expedient of Mexico in all things and it is not strange that the reparation for the flag incident should be stood off.

Between the alternative of standing against an adobe wall and facing war Huerta prefers the latter. Uncle Sam looks good to the assassin of Madero.

Now to avenge the flag. No longer will it be "Remember the Maine," but "Remember the Flag." The insult must be wiped out in blood.

The burning question now is what is old Grape Juice going to do. Will he take water or grape juice?

GETTING AFTER AUTO OWNERS. Secretary of State George Brodigan is preparing a list of auto owners of the state for the tax commission which will proceed at once to investigate the reason for the small amount paid to the office of the secretary of state for auto licenses. Many of the auto owners have failed to send in the amount of license fees as required by law, treating the statutes as more or less of a joke, and in many cases the same owners are the loudest shouters about the condition of the roads.
